Adding Citations
You’ll see lots of citations in any given Wikipedia article. When sources of a text have been cited, you’ll see a footnote in the sentence.

Adding citations is super important. Making sure that articles are well-cited helps prevent them from getting deleted.
The Reference list

See also [edit]

- Great Wall of Vagina artwork by Jamie McCartney, 2008

References [edit]

2. Chicago, 10.
10. Mullarkey, Maureen. "The Dinner Party is a Church Supper: Judy Chicago at the Brooklyn Museum." Commonweal
Open your Sandbox to start practicing! You’ll need to first create a References List section by clicking Insert and selecting References List from the dropdown.
Add a citation to your sandbox

To add a citation, click the cite button. You can simply enter the URL or the ISBN of your source and it will generate a citation for you.
Click Manual to use a template and enter your source manually. This is useful when the citation doesn’t appear how you’d like it to with the standard “automatic” option.
Practice citing!

1. Insert a citation in your sandbox for this book:

2. Insert a citation for this news article:

Cohen, Noam (2011-01-30). "Define Gender Gap? Look up Wikipedia’s Contributor List". The New York Times. You can use its corresponding article link to add it to your references:

Practice citing even more!

3. Now that you’ve gotten some practice, add a citation to your sandbox that relates to your area of interest!

4. And finally ... go forth into the world of public-facing articles! Find an existing article in your area of interest that needs a citation and find a source text to add as a reference.